Description

Now, when someone changes his comment in an issue, no notification is sent about it. So, if a user comments an issue, then changes his comment, then other users get notification with first version of the comment, and don't get its change. So, they don't have actual information.

Could you, please, make notifications when an issue comment is changed?

This shall be optionaly configureable by user, because if you correct some grammar in the comment, it will send to many emails for nearly the same information.
Other solution: Wait 15 minutes witout chnaange again or so, and then send "final" version

As we need quick communications, I think, it's better to make a checkbox "Notify about changes" under the editing field to let user choose to send the notification or not. Also, for us it would be better if the checkbox is set by default.

+1 it seems it's easy to "miss" crucial info the way it works now
The solution proposed by Anton looks good enough.

How about this plugin https://github.com/clear-code/redmine-plugin-journal-change-notifier ?
This plugin notifies when issue comment is updated. It includes diff.
