| Description | |
| There is currently no way for a user to find out who is a member of which groups. I would like this page (and the individual group pages) to be visible by non-admin users (although obviously not editable): http://demo.redmine.org/groups In conjunction with Feature Request #12794 (Member groups not listed in project page), here is how I would see it being used: I open a new Bug Issue for a project and assign it to the group "Database-Developers". When nothing happens with the issue, I want to know who is in that group so that I can talk to them in person. | |

The following code allows users to see group members according to "Users visibility" setting (#11724) of their role.

The attached patches implement the feature.

- A user can see `/groups/:id` page that displays group members if the group is visible for the user. The visibility of the group follows "Users visibility" setting of roles
- Adds links from group names to `/groups/:id` page

| Non-admin users can see group members by clicking a group name on the project overview page.

Also, the assignee field now shows a link to the group page if the assignee is a group (r21075).
