Drop Ruby 2.2 support

Description
Currently, Redmine 4.0 supports Ruby 2.2. But the latest nokogiri gem 1.10.0 supports 2.3 and later, does not 2.2. So, we cannot update nokogiri gem to 1.10.0 as long as Redmine officially supports Ruby 2.2. However, it is necessary to update nokogiri to 1.10.0 in order to support Ruby 2.6 because older nokogiri does not support Ruby 2.6 on Windows (https://github.com/sparklemotion/nokogiri/pull/1850). We have to choose the Ruby version we support, 2.2 or 2.6. Needless to say, Redmine 4.0 should support Ruby 2.6 rather than retired 2.2.

What about just locking nokogiri 1.9.0 for Ruby 2.2?

You are right. I quite forgot about it. This should work.

In my opinion, we should drop Ruby 2.2 support in version:"4.1.0".

#6 - 2019-01-08 03:34 - Go MAEDA

- Assignee set to Jean-Philippe Lang
- Target version set to 4.0.1

Jean-Philippe Lang is considering to drop Ruby 2.2 support in 4.0-stable (see #30161#note-3). I will leave this issue to him.

Agree.

I proposed version:"4.1.0" because version:"4.0.1" will be a maintenance release (mostly with bug fixes and small changes) and dropping support for Ruby 2.2 could have an important impact:

- Server administrators will need to update the Ruby version on installations with Ruby 2.2.
- The codebase of the plugins compatible with 4.0 must be rechecked by their developers to support 4.0.1.

We don't have to drop Ruby 2.2 support in a hurry for now. And I think there isn't any harm to commit the patch #30356#note-4 to the trunk and 4.0-stable.

I would like to commit #30356#note-4 as a part of #30241. What do you all think?

I'm totally agree.

- Status changed from New to Closed
- Assignee deleted (Jean-Philippe Lang)
- Target version deleted (4.0.1)

Uses Nokogiri 1.9 for Ruby 2.2, 1.10 for Ruby >=2.3. We don't have to drop support for Ruby 2.2. See r17778.
