Description

When visiting Redmine on Chrome 86, the section headers for Filters and Options do not react to clicks; no error is shown in Javascript console, however--it is as if the clicks never happened. The problem manifests itself also for this Redmine installation, so I don't think it is related to a particular Redmine version, but rather some Chrome change introduced in 86. The problem happens even in Incognito mode with no Chrome add-ons running.

It is likely this problem is not caused by a Chrome bug but a planned change, and if so a fix in Redmine may be required.

I've reported an issue as it may be a Chrome bug. https://bugs.chromium.org/p/chromium/issues/detail?id=1131257
If it is a specification, it is necessary to deal with it on the Redmine side.

Thanks all! I've used a CSS styling extension to take advantage of the 'position: relative' fix.
